In this humorous account of a dream mid-life journey, New Yorker Janice Inman takes a break from home and family and travels to Lisbon, hoping to learn how to make tile murals like the ones that cover so many of Portugal's homes, churches and businesses. Unfortunately, tile-making classes turn out to be hard to come by, even in Portugal. No matter ... she'll let Lisbon be her teacher! Traveling through the city and its suburbs – going from walled inner-city neighborhood to museum, and from beach town to fairytale mountaintop palace – she gathers not only inspiration, but also some experiences of a lifetime. Follow along as this quiet homebody breaks out of her old routines, learns new skills and discovers some hidden strengths, all while exploring fascinating Lisbon, that rare European capital with room for the hip and the frumpy, the young and the old, the rich and the poor – and even the odd rooster!

Escape from the ordinary, your adventure awaits!

By Karen Mutter

Considering a trip to the beautiful city of Lisbon, Portugal? You would do well to consider this delightful book as your introduction to the sights and sounds of one of the most overlooked destinations in Europe. Accompany the author on a quest to search out the history and craft of Portuguese tile making. (An art form perhaps not familiar to most, but very much worthy of a closer look, who knew)!

Lisbon is an ancient city that is famous for its boundless array of sweeping tile murals, found not only in obvious landmarks such as the many castles, libraries and palaces, but also in an abundance of private and public spaces both grand and small. You may consider yourself not exactly, “into” the particulars of tile making, no matter, the author’s pursuit of beauty and knowledge is an enjoyable journey down a road less traveled, so tag along regardless!

As a suggestion, you may find it advantageous to avail yourself of an additional electronic device with a mapping website at the ready as you explore along with your guide, as many names and address’ of the featured sites are mentioned throughout. Such an addition of visual effect goes a long way to enhance the touring experience.

To sum it all up, the take-away would suggest an invitation to the reader to embrace the adventure that is found in the different and unfamiliar, just as it did our intrepid guide. So track down that passport and set out on your own personal sojourn, be it Lisbon or another far flung place. To spur the reader on in this regard seems to be after all, the author's ultimate intention!

A surprisingly funny and insightful read! I couldn't help but feel transported by the authors talented story telling. I've never considered Lisbon to be on my travel bucket list but this humorous account told through the eyes of your typical American housewife was inspiring and heart warming. Hilarious encounters, humbling grounded insight, and tile making in Portugal. What more could you want?
