Review

"The opportunity for children to sharpen their rhyming and observation skills as well as learn their colors make this interactive journey a must. Don't miss it!" (School Library Journal)

A walk through the woods provides ample opportunities for spotting colors in Bear and Mouse's latest adventure. "Mouse and bear are walking;/ they are chitter-chatter-talking./ So much for them to do./ And the bear sees..." begins Wilson, as the animals appear against a white backdrop; both the open-ended rhyme and a pair of blue dragonflies hint at what awaits after the page turn. The next spread is a riot of blue, with Bear splashing in a river while flowers, fish, butterflies, and fruit offer readers many opportunities to "spy blue with Bear." Though Wilson's rhymes can be a tad herky-jerky, Chapman's vibrant acrylics give children plenty to pore over. (Publishers Weekly July 14, 2014)

As charming as ever

By J.Prather

What a pleasure it is to see our old friends Bear, Mole, Mouse and Wren back for another adventure. Hare, Badger, Owl and a host of other familiar woodland creatures appear on these pages dedicated to learning colors and celebrating friendship. All of the friends join together throughout the book, which ends in a fun picnic and an invitation to the reader to find colors "just like Bear."

The book beautifully illustrates the colors brown, green, yellow, red, and blue. The rhyming is as smooth as ever, aside from one little blip when green and stream don't seem to quite measure up. A couple of read aloud practice runs will no doubt smooth things out and keep this rollicking collection of friends rolling along.

Two page spreads highlighting the colors alternate with two page spreads featuring the characters and lots of white space. This makes the colors really pop and leaves little doubt about what color is being illustrated. Each color spread also features the color word in a large font.

Anyone familiar with the Bear series of books will gladly embrace this new picnic among friends. It's a short little feel good story of picnics, nature and friendship that will also help your little one learn some valuable basic concepts. This is a perfect choice for older toddlers or young preschoolers just learning their colors, and will serve as a wonderful introduction for the youngest readers to the Bear series of books. With excellent writing and charming illustrations, this book is an enthusiastic recommend for story time and any personal collection.

An absolutely beautiful way to learn colors

By Sunshine on a Rainy Day

This is one of the most lovely books about colors that I have ever seen. Bear and mouse are walking and talking and as they go along they encounter different colors. On each double spread page you are invited to spy the items with the color for those pages. The items are sometimes subtle so the reader or listener has to look carefully to find them all. Along the journey, bear and mouse encounter different animals such as badger and wren. The characters are adorable.

The illustrations are beautiful and colorful. The verse in rhyme is not over done and draws you in. There are plenty of opportunities for the littlest ones to learn new vocabulary. They will adore this book.

A great intro to colors book for a toddler (at least ours)!

By AQBoston

A great intro to colors book for a toddler (at least ours)! Our little guy was already a Karma Wilson fan and familiar with her other books (Bear Gives Thanks, Bear Wants More, Bear Sleeps In, etc), and this newest book does not disappoint. Simple text. Great illustrations. Our little guy loves following bear through the story and finding objects on each page. Took him about a month and he knew red, yellow, green & blue - the colors she focuses on. What a fun book on colors!
