The world of poets and poetry is given a brief, comprehensive introduction.

By Lynn Batdorf

Foremost this book is an introduction to different styles of poetry and different poets. It is written for those who have an interest in poetry, but are either intimidated by poetry or are unsure of where to begin their journey.

In nearly chronological order 31 poets, who lived from 1770 to 1892, are each explored in an average of ten pages. Each begins with a brief history of the poet, followed by brief selected passages - each with an appropriate introduction by Stebbing. This approach allows the reader to understand the world of poets and poetry with excitement and comprehension. In reading this book, I've discovered poets I've never heard of before. These strangers have quickly become new found friends encouraging me to further explore a rewarding journey into poetry.

The book finishes with a nice index of the first sentence of each poem, in alphabetical order. This is followed by an index of the poets. This book is Vol II and ought to be read in conjunction with (but not necessarily prior to) Vol I Chaucer to Burns.

Published in 1913, this 440pp book ought to be read slowly, with thought and passion. Each word, by either Stebbing or the poet, is carefully and deliberately chosen. I found myself re-reading passages in order to savor and comprehend many passages. The more effort one puts into this book, the greater the reader is rewarded.
